If you are new to betting, then it is very likely that at some point you can be very confused by the load of information.

They are quite popular bets, as they allow you to protect yourself to some extent and receive your money back if a match ends in a draw.

In a zero handicap there are only two betting options possible H1(O) and H2(O) Tj T* BT

Consider that you bet on a zero handicap on Juventus in the Italian Championship match with Milan.

Juventus loses and your bet is lost.

You will have yourself at least protected in case everything goes not as predicted.

If there is a clear favorite in a match, then a zero handicap is not a wise option as it will offer rather low odds.

Let's see an example.
